counselors.

Alumni Feature: Zach Adamis

As students gather after summer school, eating lunch and awaiting the days' summer camp adventure, you can always find counselor and Armstrong alum, Zach Adamis: the counselor, who is not much taller than some of the students, with young campers hanging from him -- literally hanging on his arms and legs and figuratively hanging on his every word. Zach is the ultimate "kid magnet." This summer marks Zach's eighth year with the Armstrong Summer Camp program - he has served as a volunteer and now joins the team as a counselor in charge of the A's, a collection of seventeen third graders.

Zach is one of seven of Armstrong Alumni who returned this summer to serve as either a Camp Counselor and or Class Aide. Zach's story may not be unique, but it is inspiring. Click here to read more.

Armstrong Updates

Allan Dancer who attended Armstrong from first through fourth grade and is now a software engineer returned to campus this spring to take a tour. On his update form he writes:

"My first 3 years at Raytheon I wrote a software suite that would perform spacecraft flight dynamics and orbital operations for an unmanned satellite system. In order to do this I had to learn and master math that I never knew existed. It is my adaptive learning style that allowed me to do this and I believe that it was forged during my time at Charles Armstrong School."

Allan, thanks for shring your story.

If you are in the neighborhood and want a tour, just let us know by emailing
